Barrett has lived and painted in the area since 1970, creating iconic images of Bucks County. A disciplined and prolific painter, he paints every day in his tiny Lahaska studio. He admits, "I am driven to paint. It is part of how I live. Once I have an idea, the urge is there to do what I have imagined."

The artist is known for the signature frames that make his paintings truly stand apart. Beautifully crafted, gilded and incised, they pay homage to early Bucks County frame makers, Harer and Badura.

Jurors selected 93 framed pieces and 20 sculptures to exhibit during the 87th annual Phillips' Mill Art Exhibition. Since its beginning in 1929, the Phillips' Mill Art Exhibition has been the premier art show in the Delaware Valley. Founded by the legendary greats William Lathrop, Edward Redfield, Daniel Garber and William Taylor, the early shows were a way to display their work for their friends. Famous artists from the New Hope Impressionist School began to exhibit, including John Folinsee, George Sotter, Henry Leith-Ross, Rae Sloan Bredin and Fern Coppedge, all represented in major museums worldwide.

This year's jurors are watercolorist Howard Watson, of Wyncote; Holly Trostle Brighman, an oil and watercolorist from Philadelphia; graphics specialist Ron Wyffels, of Havertown; sculptor Jennifer Frudakis, of Doylestown; and sculptor Joe Mooney, of Philadelphia.

Charles McVicker, a Princeton, N.J., watercolor, oil and acrylic painter, is this year's honored artist.

The Phillips' Mill (oil on linen on board) by Luiz Vilela is the painting selected by the Art Committee for its 2013 campaign.

Art at Kings Oaks, a unique pop-up art show in Bucks County, presents twenty visual artists from across the U.S. and abroad. The exhibition takes place in an historic barn and chapel on Kings Oaks Farm in Newtown, PA. Curator Alex Cohen says the show, now in its fourth year, promises to be the most exciting yet, bringing together a cadre of ambitious makers and prominent contemporaries. "I admire their pursuit of individual vision, attention to craft, and the poetic depth of their work." Only on view for the first two weekends of October, Art at Kings Oaks blooms briefly but vibrantly.
